

ARC Private Client Indices Performance Estimates For Q1 2026

Performance Summary Tables

ARC PCI provide a unique insight into the actual returns being generated by investment managers for their discretionary private client portfolios. The indices are based on the real performance numbers delivered to discretionary private clients by participating investment managers.

There are no pre-set asset allocations; no asset class restrictions; no concentration limits; and no index performances used. Only actual performance numbers are included in the calculation of the indices.

ARC Private Client Indices Performance Estimates For Q1 2026

What's been going on?

March saw volatility return to global financial markets. The escalating conflict in the Middle East triggered a surge in the oil price, which in turn led to a sharp sell-off in equity markets. The S&P World Index closed the month down 6.4% (total return in U.S. dollar terms). Among the S&P World Sector Indices, Energy was the only sector to deliver positive returns, gaining 12.1%. Materials were hardest hit, declining by 11.2% on the month.

Fears that higher energy prices would lead to stagflation undermined expectations of near-term interest rate cuts in the U.S., U.K., and other major economies. U.S. Treasury yields rose across the curve, and combined with widening credit spreads, resulted in broadly negative returns for fixed income investors. Higher real yields also weighed on precious metals, with gold declining 11.5% in USD terms. One of the few beneficiaries of heightened geopolitical risk was the U.S. dollar, which strengthened against most major currencies.

With very few places to hide, March is expected to have been a challenging month for the ARC Private Client Indices. Returns are estimated to have ranged from -2% to -6% depending on currency and risk profile.

The tables below set out the performance of the index over each month from January 2021 to date. All figures are percentages. Estimates are shown in green.
